Along the Great Silk Road we discover the treasures of Uzbekistan

Once an ancient network of trade roads connected East and West; starting from China, it went through Eurasia and ended in Europe. Caravans and ships carried diverse commodities, but also knowledge, which catalyzed huge exchange and development. Since the precious good was silk, it was called the "Great Silk Road". Samarkand, Bukhara and Khiva were the centers and crosspoints on this road, their gravity attracted travellers, merchants, scholars from all over the world. Today this mixed atmosphere is still alive in small and narrow streets, in colorful bazaars, magnificent architecture and in the people of Uzbekistan. Within our tour, we will visit those ancient cities and will try to grasp how this historical and cultural heritage is shaping modern Uzbekistan.

While diving into these fairytale cities, we will nevertheless also have a chance to experience one of the biggest environmental catastrophes of the 21st Century firsthand - the shrinking Aral Sea. We will see the ghost of the sea, face its consequences and meet the people who are struggling with the expanding desert on the ground.

The Karakalpakstan State Museum of Art named after I.V. Savitsky - hosts the world's second largest collection of Russian avantgarde art, often described as the "Louvre" of the East. It is also home to one of the largest collections of archaeological and folk objects as well as applied and contemporary art originating from Central Asia.

Samarkand

Samarkand is one of the oldest cities in Central Asia and the old capital of the Timurid Empire. For centuries, the city had been an intercultural center of excellence, where along with Islam the students studied astronomy and mathematics. Now Samarkand is an important cultural, economic and educational city in Uzbekistan.

Bukhara

Once Bukhara was an important center on the Great Silk Road. In the Middle Ages, the city reached its cultural and scientific bloom and became a major center of Islamic culture. Today the city accumulates a number of mosques, as well as the tombs of many Islamic saints.
